LADY COOK, TENNESSEE C. CLAFLIN,

At Doughty House, Richmond, London, England—Olive Logan Writes
Entertainingly of Her—Doughty
House Described—A Splendid Mansion—Lady Cook's Entertainments.

Special Correspondence of the Intelligence.

LONDON, August 23.—Among the most delightful reunions of the brilliant London season, now closed, have been the garden parties of Lady Cook at Doughty House, Richmond, Surrey. They have been attended by fashion, intellect, beauty and talent in every line, and the hostess has shown prominently among her guests by every quality that can make a woman admired and beloved; and beloved Lady Cook is by all who know her. Nothing is more beautiful to see than the evidences of the deep affection which exists between Sir Francis Cook and his accomplished wife. Lady Cook is on the most affectionate terms with her husband's children—an advantage which not every stepmother can claim, and all the members of his family are entirely her friends. Lady Cook has won the universal affection of those by whom she is surrounded by her amiability, her winning manners, her gentleness, and by the daily exhibition of all the admirable traits which go to make up her character. The day will come when Sir Francis Cook's name will have an added lustre apart from his own great achievements in commerce and his princely benefactions to philanthropic objects from his having wedded this noble-hearted woman, who, amid the splendor of her surroundings, thinks of nothing but doing good to her less fortunate sisters in this world of strange contrasts.

Reader, it is a great thing in the worldly sense to bear an English title, to be a baronet's wife and mistress of two such princely residences as Doughty House and Vathek's fabulously beautiful palace at Cintra. The head of an ordinary woman would be quite turned by these wonderfully flattering circumstances, and her bearing would be unsupportably haughty. But Lady Cook's manner is all sweetness, all modesty. The pleasure of others is her great concern. She delights in showing the priceless treasures of Sir Francis Cook's gallery, not for the sake of ostentatious pride in the great possessions of her husband, but purely for art's sake, for the sake of those who love art, and, above all, to do honor to her husband's taste in selecting such masterpieces of painting and sculpture.

IN PERFECT TASTE.
Lady Cook's apparel, though rich, is always of subdued tints, and plainly made. She seldom wears a jewel. At her garden parties the most simply dressed woman present was the hostess. This is in accordance with the highest canon of good taste. The remark passed from lip to lip among the guests that anyone seeking a lesson in good form could find it in its finest expression in the bearing of Sir Francis and Lady Cook. Such heartiness and simplicity of manner and such magnificence of surroundings; such treasures of art on every hand; such luxuriance of costly vases, such perfect attendance in serving them; such a palpable desire to give pleasure to their guests, with such high-bred self-effacement on the part of the hostess!

Doughty House stands on the brow of Richmond Hill, overlooking that gem of valley scenery which has evoked the enthusiasm of poets for generations past. It is a large double-fronted mansion flanked by an extensive conservatory, whose glowing plant-life attracts the gaze of passers. Once within the hall the treasures of art instantly arrest the attention, and awaken the admiration of the visitor. Rare statuary, beautiful pictures, antique furniture and precious old china, delight the observer at the very portal.

On the right of the hallway is the large and lofty dining room. The prevailing color is a rich crimson, and the apartment is full—"without overflowing"—of pictures of great beauty. The table is laid for five o'clock tea; a plentiful repast of delicacies, including every sort of hot-house fruit. Beautiful flowers in the immense silver vase standing in the center of the table; a grand array of silver plate upon the sideboards; priceless porcelain, Butler and footman (the latter in livery) perform the service most efficiently for the distinguished guests.

THE DRAWING ROOM.
Opposite is the drawing room, a glow of golden satin damask decoration, the doors richly paneled and gilded. Two large and exquisite paintings are framed into the over-mantels. Many other beautiful canvases are here. The furniture is very handsome, not on suite exactly, but chairs and sofas of varied shapes and upholstery are gathered harmoniously together. A wonderful cover of ancient stichery is laid upon the grand piano; Indian embroidery beautifies a gothic-backed chair. An interesting large panel photograph of Lady Cook stands in a good light. It is the same from which was taken the portrait which appeared in the illustrated interview with Lady Cook in Annie Swan's magazine, "The Woman at Home." It is a profile likeness, taken reading, a very good photograph; and those who derive from it their impression of Lady Cook's features, can have little idea of the variation of the impression, the sparkle of the eye, the curve of the lips, which lend so great a charm to the living physiognomy.

A copy of Lady Cook's volume on the "Constitutional Rights of Women in America," with an exquisite steel-engraved portrait of her in girlhood as frontispiece, lies on one of the splendid tables of this beautiful drawing room. Arched doorways lead into the gallery, or, to be more exact, the succession of galleries, wherein are hung Sir Francis Cook's far-famed paintings.

Nothing short of a catalogue of many pages would suffice wherein to describe the treasures of this collection. Sir Francis Cook possesses one or more canvases of every old master known to the world. His gallery being private, no set catalogue has been made, but the frame of each picture bears the name of the painter. The enchanted visitor finds himself surrounded by the sight of paintings by such masters as Albrecht, Durer, Botticelli, Titian, Rembrandt, Rubens, Bellotto, Porzio, Ostade, Gerard Dour, Paul Potter, all schools, and varying epochs. The first room contains, among other most valuable canvases, several paintings by Sir Joshua Reynolds, Hogarth, Gainsborough, and other great English masters; the next, a square corner room, looking into the conservatory from inside, holds a wealth of canvases of sacred subjects, and also various valuable curious, hand-painted missals in Spanish, the crystal benitier which was the property of the early French kings, and which was lent by Sir Francis Cook for exhibition at the South Kensington museum for a time. An almost priceless collection of majolica is contained in several large cabinets in this room. In the long gallery adjoining, hang masterpieces by Murillo and other renowned Spanish artists; an equestrian life-sized figure by Velasquez is in the first gallery. The rear-most or small gallery contains an exquisite altar, while the walls are covered with beautiful Madonnas with the Holy Child, the Christ in agony, grand tazas of marble, valuable carved oaken figures, wonderful old loom tapestries, and marvels of hand embroidery add their respective attractions to these superb galleries. A cultured taste went hand in hand with princely outlay in the accumulation of such treasures. Lovely views of the beautiful gardens of Doughty House are to be had from the occasional side windows, occasional only because, as in all proper art galleries, the lighting is from the top. Underneath the picture gallery there is a hall specially reserved for statuary. Some very interesting antiques are here, notably several old Roman Sarcophagi sculptured in high relief.

THE GARDEN PARTIES.
At the garden parties a long table was set up on the velvety green sward, beneath the grand old trees. Every luxury in the way of light refreshment was provided, and a troupe of male singers, picturesquely cloaked and masked, sang sweetly as the guests partook of the al fresco banquet. Little Baby Costello, a fairy in white gossamer with lemon-colored silk stockings, danced upon an Indian carpet laid upon lawn. Stars from the opera sang in the great drawing-room. A distinguished company was gathered on each occasion, composed of English, German, and American guests. Lady Cook delights in seeing her own country-people at her beautiful home. She has no longer the robust health she once enjoyed, and therefore does not go out a great deal. She was, however, at the courtesy of Jersey's garden party at Osterly Park, and now and then accepts some of the many invitations to good houses which she receives. Lady Burton visits at Doughty House, as also does the Hon. Mrs. Randolph Clay, widow of our ex-United States minister in Russia.

About six months of the year Sir Francis and Lady Cook pass at Cintra, where, by virtue of the Portuguese title of her husband, she is countess of Montserrat. Sir Francis Cook's charities are numerous at his Portuguese home, and his amiable wife is looked upon as a veritable Lady Bountiful. Lady Cook is never so happy as when assisting her husband in dispensing his aims to poor children, and she has adopted as a daughter a little Portuguese girl, who proves a pleasant and intelligent companion.

The aim of Lady Cook's life is to accomplish some great and lasting work for women's welfare. A scheme with this object in view is under consideration, but is not sufficiently perfected to be written of in detail. Meantime Lady Cook is indefatigable in her literary work with its philanthropic basis, and her papers are printed in media of high standing, such as the Westminster Review, and others of that class. Writing is a labor of love with her. Sir Francis does not allow her to accept payment. The day will come when Lady Cook's work will be fully appreciated by all Christian people. The cruel aspersions of which she has been the subject in the past have only influenced her character in making it more amiable, more eager to return good for evil. Her melodious voice has a pathetic softness when she refers to the wrongs she has suffered; and her sweet expressive face reflects the tenderness of her heart, the strength of her all-for-giving soul.

OLIVE LOGAN.

DEATH OF GENERAL BANKS.

The Massachusetts Statesman Passes Away at Waltham.

WALTHAM, MASS., Sept. 2.—General Nathaniel P. Banks died at his home yesterday morning, aged seventy-eight years. He was born in Waltham January 30, 1816. He was admitted to the bar and in 1849 elected to the lower house of the state legislature by Democrats and Free Soilers. By a like combination he was chosen speaker of that body and in the same year elected to Congress. He was re-elected in 1854 by the American and Republican parties, but having formally withdrawn from the Democracy. He was chosen speaker of the house of representatives on the 132d ballot. In 1857 he was elected governor of Massachusetts and re-elected in 1858 and 1859.

Afterward, in 1861, he was commissioned as major general of volunteers and assigned to a corps in the army of the Potomac. He commanded his corps at the battle of Cedar mountain, and soon after was placed in command of the forces at Washington City. In December, 1862, he succeeded General Butler in command in New Orleans, and the following July took Fort Hudson, which finally opened the Mississippi to the union fleet. In the spring of 1864 he made an expedition up the Red river, and the following May was relieved of his command. He re-entered politics on returning from the army, and in 1868, 1869 and 1870 was returned to Congress. He practically closed his political career in 1872 by leaving the Republican party and taking an active part in the Democratic-Liberal campaign, with Horace Greeley as Presidential candidate.

The funeral will take place on Tuesday under the direction of the city authorities. The flags on the public buildings of Waltham are displayed at half-mast in honor of the deceased.

IOWA'S WAIL GOVERNOR.

Death of Samuel K. Kirkwood at Iowa City.

Iowa City, Iowa, Sept. 2.—Samuel J. K. Kirkwood, the war governor of Iowa, died here yesterday at the age of eighty-one years. He had an unusual career as a public servant in high offices. He was born in Hartford county, Me., in 1813. His schooling ended when he was fourteen years old. In 1835 he went to Ohio, studied law and was admitted to the bar in 1845. He was made prosecuting attorney of Richmond county, and in 1850 was a member of the Ohio constitutional convention. In 1850 he went to Iowa to engage in farming, and the next year he was elected to the state senate. In 1859 he was elected governor of Iowa, and re-elected in 1861. He placed in the field fifty regiments of infantry and cavalry, and throughout the war never held a draft, as Iowa's quota of volunteers was always filled. President Lincoln offered him the post of United States minister to Denmark, but he declined it. In 1863 he was elected to the United States senate. In 1875 he was for the third time elected governor of Iowa, and in 1876 was re-elected to the senate, when he resigned to enter the cabinet of President Garfield as secretary of the interior. Since 1882 he has lived a retired life.

SIX NEGROES LYNCHED.

A Mob Kills Them for Alleged Barn Burning—A Terrible Tennessee Tragedy.

MEMPHIS, TENN., Sept. 2.—News comes of the lynching of six negroes in the northern part of the county, two miles west of Millington. Barns and dwellings have been burned in that vicinity, and suspicion pointed to Dan Hawkins, Robert Haynes, Warner Williams, Ed Hall, John Hayes and Graham White. Friday they were arrested by Deputy Sheriff Richardson, who started with his prisoners in a wagon to Millington. About midnight the party was stopped by a mob of fifty men armed with shot guns, who killed all the prisoners, and then remounted their horses, which were tied near by, and rode away in the darkness. The lynchers were not masked, but the officer, being new to that part of the country, recognized none of them. An inquest was held on the bodies this morning, and the jury, which included two negroes, found that the prisoners had come to their deaths at the hands of persons unknown.

Dan Hawkins was arrested a year ago with several others, charged with the burning of barns and residences in the Kerrville neighborhood. They were brought to trial, and two of them sentenced to terms in the penitentiary. They made full confessions, and implicated Hawkins as the leader of the band of robbers. Hawkins got a new trial, however, and after spending some months in jail, was released a few weeks ago. Since that time the burnings have recommenced, and the Millington neighborhood as well as Kerrville has suffered.

Deputy Sheriff Richardson was employed to ferret out the incendiaries, and with the assistance of a negro "spotter," he at length got evidence that resulted in the arrest of Hawkins and the other five negroes who were lynched. About midnight Friday the officer secured a two-horse wagon and a white driver named R. T. Atchison to drive it. He loaded his prisoners into the vehicle handcuffed and chained together, and started for Millington. As they reached Big Creek, two miles west of Millington, somebody in the woods by the roadside called out: "Don't try to cross there. The bridge is down; come this way."

Richardson got down, and taking the horses by the head, led them into a path that opened in the direction whence the warning had come. It was dark in the woods, but suddenly Richardson saw two guns presented at his stomach, and a stern voice said: "Throw up your hands." "What does this mean?" demanded the officer. "None of your d—business," was the reply. "Throw 'em up." The officer obeyed. Then Atchison was ordered to get down, and was placed under guard.

The negro prisoners, divining the purpose of the unseen mob, attempted to leap from the wagon. A volley rang out from forty or fifty guns and they fell back, wounded and dying. A dozen of the mob leaped into the wagon and threw them out. Volleys after volleys were then poured into the struggling mass and in a few moments all was still. Hawkins' head was almost shot from his body and some of the others were terribly mangled.

The mob, after making sure that all six were dead, mounted and rode away. Atchison then mounted one of the mules and hastened to Justice Hill's house at some distance away and notified him of the slaughter. The justice at once made ready to go to the spot, and at daybreak was there with a jury of inquest, composed of five white men and two negroes, who rendered a verdict as above stated.

Sheriff J. A. McCarver, who was to have taken charge of his office yesterday, will not do so until Monday. Meanwhile the outgoing officer, A. J. McLendon, will take the lynching in hand. He will go to the scene of the crime this afternoon. McCarver, the new sheriff, is a man of hardy and determined character, and the general opinion is that he will not fail to find out the lynchers and land them in jail.

IRISH LOTTERY FRAUDS.

The Grand Prizes, When Won, Are Said to Be Not Worth the Having.

LONDON, Sept. 2.—Very considerable discussion appears to arise from the fact that lotteries, which are illegal in England, are legal in Ireland. To say nothing of the absurdity of this maladministration, complaints are rife that the runners of these lotteries flood the country with prospectuses, but fail to give satisfaction when the time for realizing the prizes comes around.

Rubbish of the most trivial character is found to be the reward for engaging in this gambling, while many persons condone a gambling scheme because the lottery partakes of a charitable character.

The usual treatment of catarrh is very unsatisfactory, as thousands can testify. Proper local treatment is positively necessary to success, but many, if not most, of the remedies in general use afford but temporary relief. A cure certainly cannot be expected from snuffs, powders, douches and washes. Ely's Cream Balm, which is so highly commended, is a remedy which combines the important requisites of quick action, specific curative power, with perfect safety and pleasantness to the patient. The druggists all sell it.

A. M. BAILEY, a well known citizen of Eugene, Oregon, says his wife has for years been troubled with chronic diarrhoea and used many remedies with little relief until she tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, which has cured her sound and well. Give it a trial and you will be surprised at the prompt relief it affords.

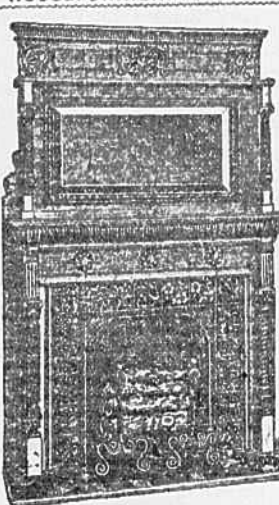

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.
